SCENE FROM "THE SHEIK'S WIFE"

"The Sheikh's Wife" is a great French production filmed in the deserts of Arabia. The story comes to a thrilling climax in the night attack of the Arabs on the English camp. The Sheikh, maddened with jealousy at the thought that the British are trying to take his European wife from him, rouses his tribesmen against the intruders. But the surprise attack fails, for the English are forewarned.

BLACKSTONE

Wallace Reid, roped rings, boxing gloves, paunchy managers and black eyes give way at the Blackstone today to an entirely different group of people who have an entirely different story to relate on the Blackstone screen.

"Give the people the best pictures that can be bought at the lowest possible prices, and get as much variety in the films as possible," is the policy that has made the RKO's houses so eminently successful. And the Blackstone program for the week is a fitting example of the working out of this policy.

"Other Women's Clothes" is the title of today's picture. It's a gorgeous film, big in every respect, and is among other things the greatest style show ever brought to the screen.

"The Cradle," featuring starry eyed Ethel Clayton, comes next. It's a domestic drama—with lots of romance and laughs thrown in for good measure.

AUDITORIUM

"The Sheikh's Wife," a spectacular photoplay of the great Sahara desert, actually produced in Arabia, opens a two days engagement today at the Auditorium Theater. Henry Russell, noted French producer, spent several weeks with his company of 500 people, including 50 principals, on the desert sands to get "atmosphere" for the story, which is based on traditions of a notorious tribe of the Sahara.

The cast was selected with great care by Mr. Russell. He wanted an English girl for his heroine; one who was the counterpart of the woman described by the Arabians as the

It is entitled William Emmons and others against Oscar Harding, to quiet title.

Twenty years ago Harding bought 50 acres of land in this county. Several years later one of the children of the man from whom he purchased the land laid claim to 10 acres, presenting a deed, which had been given by the father before the transfer to Harding. Mr. Harding turned this ten acres over to the claimant.

Now, after 20 years, other children of the family are laying claim to the entire farm on the same grounds.

FEDERAL LIQUOR AGENT WILL PROBE COMPANY

INDIANAPOLIS, June 13.—Bert Morgan, federal prohibition director for Indiana, went to Hammond Tuesday afternoon to begin an investigation, it was said, into the affairs of the Hammond distilling company.

Information received from G. J. Simmons, chief of the prohibition enforcement agents in northern Indiana, that A. Brunel, a guard for the distilling company, had been arrested earlier in the day by agents who took 10 gallons of bonded whiskey from him, resulted in Mr. Morgan making the trip. It was understood.

The distilling company was closed for a short time several weeks ago by Mr. Morgan. It was placed under surveillance again when it was learned that Brunel had been sent from Cincinnati as a guard and that he drove each day back and forth between Hammond and Chicago in a large automobile.
